- Autoencoders are a growing family of tools for nonlinear feature fusion.
- A taxonomy of these methods is proposed, detailing each one of them.
- Comparisons to other feature fusion techniques and applications are studied.
- Guidelines on autoencoder design and example results are provided.
- Available software for building autoencoders is summarized.